

A Few minutes with the Boss

Bin Laden goes to Hell

Well, some good news for a change. Our US military has the bar set high for dedication, perseverance, action, and of course, bravery. The whole strike against this devil is simply unbelievable.

The search for this guy and the culmination of this operation across borders, under the cover of darkness and with such precision, as one understands that the devil's hideout was about 100 yards away from a Pakistan military base is astounding.

Many hats off to our military, President Bush for committing to finding bin Laden and President Obama for the strength and courage to follow through and authorize this dangerous and necessary mission.

But most of all, to the strike force Navy Seal Team 6 and a combination of some extremely brave and professional military people who pulled this off, taking out Beelzebub himself and a couple of others without suffering any American casualties. Awe inspiring!

One can only hope that this evil monster got a chance to appreciate the might of the US Military before his lights went out. Who would have thought that a bullet to the head could bring so much joy? Too bad he couldn't experience that, but his date with the Big Red Hot Chili Pepper could not be put off any longer. The shot between the eyes heard round the world is something that we can only hope that for a nano-second bin Laden knew it was meant only for him. And oh yeah, sorry, dude, there are no virgins in Hell.

As we in law enforcement prepare to honor our own the week of May 15th through the 21st, and as Memorial Day beckons on the 30th honoring all our veterans, let's all just give thank and say God Bless America.

Stay safe.
