

A Few Minutes with the Boss

By: Joseph Andalina

Next time you need a cop, call a gangbanger

Yes, the likes of Tarantino, Beyonce, Spike Lee, Chris Brown, and that Colon Kaepernick-head all need to do that when they find themselves at a fearful time. Oh, for sure, there are a plethora of celebrities of all shades of gray that you can lump in here, too, but these are the most notable: the cop haters and influence peddlers.

Especially the quarterback — he of the $61,000,000 contract, ungrateful to a country that allows him to make that kind of money — as a second stringer. So he disgraces his team, his country, and himself by not standing for our anthem while using the worn out social justice problems of police killing unarmed black men and getting paid leave (I guess while waiting for trial). And, of course, he wears socks depicting cops as pigs — doing exactly what he criticizes society and cops of doing. Ignorant to the max.

The cowardly NFL and other politico types hide behind his right to free expression. Cowards all. Grow some hair on your arse, Goodell, and set some rules of discourse.

These people act like this is an epidemic of police brutality when intelligent folks know it is all ginned up by activists and the press, who will never let a story die if it involves the police. They spread vicious lies over and over, and the spoiled rat-ass celebrities increase the heat.

Cops like Officer Ortiz who pulled a suicidal man off train tracks with seconds to spare as viewed on TV is largely forgotten. Cops killed in Dallas, Louisiana, Arizona, and New Mexico are given a few moments and it's back to Beyonce's thrilling dance routine where "angels" are shot dead by police.

When I see and hear this vile crap I wonder who is it that hates whom. It reminds me of the quote of the ancient Chinese warrior Sun-Tzu in his writings in The Art of War. "If your opponent is temperamental, seek to irritate him."

Yes, let's seek to irritate them. For the above jokers and others like them, when they need a cop, call a gangbanger instead. I'm sure they would help them.

Vita é bella

P.S. Let's throw a shout out to hockey coach John Torturella, who said that anyone on his team who doesn't stand for the anthem would not play the entire game. Way to go, John.